Q: When should I use "never could" over "I never could"? Most questions I read on this website center around how to use "never" and "never could" in the right way. However, I have often seen the sentences written without the "could" part. For example, I never would have gone to the movie if she hadn't come. How to express "I never could have done it" using this grammar? A: You can say "I never could have done it" if you used an infinitive and a subjunctive mood. For example, "I never could have done it had I known that he liked painting." (not = were I knew that he liked painting.) "I could have never done it" is a kind of compound phrase. Using the verb "could" means that the speaker needs to do something, so that there is a complement. For example, "I could have come, but I didn't", "I could have bought the gift, but I didn't", "I could have studied the subject, but I didn't". Using a negative expression ("never") interrupts the flow of the sentence. It means that the speaker cannot do something even if it seemed possible at the time. It doesn't mean that the speaker lacks the ability. It has been checked that you could have done something if it seemed possible. f678ea9f9e
